

Antonio FALONE – Short Bio

Antonio Falone is an electronic engineer with almost 20 years of experience in electron linac, engineering system and project management, developed in european research infrastructures and private companies.

He has worked as system and RF engineer for the ALBA spanish light source and for the SwissFEL project.

He is now senior technologist at the INFN-LNF, where he deals with a number of projects mainly devoted to the development of particle accelerator technologies.

He is the scientific responsible of the LATINO project an open research infrastructure under construction at Frascati National Lab. He is also project manager of Eupraxia@SPARC_LAB project, which is a novel electron linear accelerator based on plasma wakefield.

He is member of the CNPM (National Committee for Project Management).